101-1 Preliminary Syllabus, Da-Yeh Univ

Information

Title		Serial No. / ID	2421 / ELR 5166
Dept.		School System / Class	2　1
Lecturer		Full or Part-time
Required / Credit	Optinal / 2	Graduate Class	Yes
Time / Place	(　)34　/ J308	Language	Chinese

Introduction

This seminar course will first lay the theoretical ground of discourse analysis by introducing its relation with studies in linguistics/applied linguistics and other fields, such as language education, sociology, communication, literature, anthropology, and ethnographic studies. A few approaches and research methods used in discourse analysis will be covered. Topics covered include data collection and tran   ion, de   ive rules, structures and forms, initiations and responses, conversational exchanges, cohesion and coherence, prefaces and alignments, literary analysis, reference and co-reference, implications, speech acts, and conversational principles, etc. Raw data of various types will be analyzed and discussed during the seminar. The students are expected to present their own analyses and lead discussion on the topics assigned.

Outline

This seminar course will first lay the theoretical ground of discourse analysis by introducing its relation with studies in linguistics/applied linguistics and other fields, such as language education, sociology, communication, literature, anthropology, and ethnographic studies. A few approaches and research methods used in discourse analysis will be covered. Topics covered include data collection and tran   ion, de   ive rules, structures and forms, initiations and responses, conversational exchanges, cohesion and coherence, prefaces and alignments, literary analysis, reference and co-reference, implicatures, speech acts, and conversational principles, etc. Raw data of various types will be analyzed and discussed during the seminar. The students are expected to present their own analyses and lead discussion on the topics assigned.

Prerequisite

Having a basic knowledge of the English language.