Introduction
The course is aimed to provide English-major students with a knowledge of Japanese, linguistic, literary, and cultural, and Japanese-major students with a knowledge of English, linguistic, literary, and cultural. It is hoped that after finishing this course they both may widen their language knowledge, expand their cultural horizon, and thereby foster a spirit of toleration of and of respect for other languages and cultures different from their own. Students will begin with learning some basic theoretic knowledge of language and culture, and then move toward history, particularly the history of Meiji period, known for its receptive influence from the West. On the basis of this framework students will be requested to read some selected essays and literary works relevant to the course mainly in English for demonstration, interpretation, and criticism. Hoping they could be acquainted with some essential characteristics that lie beneath the two languages, literatures, and cultures.
